A Russian Priest

CHIEF AGITATOR OF RECENT UPRISING

George Gapon is Called the "Little Father of the Little Russians"

The most interesting figure in Russia today is George Gapon, the young priest. He is said to be under 26 years of age, and is said to be the leader of this movement of Russian workmen, which already has cost many lives and which may, before it is suppressed, bring Russia to blood, change the whole system of government of the great Russian empire as much as important as each in the world's history as did the French revolution to which the recent movement in Russia bears so many startling resemblances.

Father Gapon is primarily an enthusiast; some say a fanatic, as was Peter the Hermit. Martin Luther and other men in history who have sincerely and faithfully made much of the world's history.

He is absolutely sincere and without the idea of gain. He believes in that he preaches with that perfect belief which causes enthusiasm and his followers trust and believe in him, with blind faith. So far as can be ascertained, his life has been without moral blemish. Whether he is the man for the hour who is to lead Russia into the promised land of political, religious and industrial freedom, the next few days will probably tell. In person he is imposing. He is a big man physically and handsome looking. If oratory conveys in itself the hug his hearers to his views, he is entitled to take high rank as an orator.

Born in "Little Russia,"

Gapon was born in Poltava, Little Russia, a peasant, and his boyhood friends in a soft field, but were never were passed as that of other boys made to test strength with Muskeges of the peasant class in Russia. He had, indeed, shown the possession of moral mentality and attracted the notice of some of the better people in the vicinity of his home.

They decided he was worth an education and sent him to school and later to a seminary in Poltava. Here he showed that no mistake had been made by his friends. He was an enthusiastic scholar and would undoubtedly have ranked high in his graduation had he not imbibed liberal ideas with his studies and thus brought down upon him the wrath of the authorities, by whom he was expelled for preaching better conditions for peasants and workmen.

After his expulsion he secured a position as a postman, which he held for a short time, when he decided to enter the priesthood. Because of his opinions he was placed under restrictions which did not permit him to hold a pastorate.

His socialist ideals grew with his growth and some time after he had been ordained a priest he wrote a book on "Christian Socialism," which not only was suppressed by the censor, but which brought him into even deeper disrepute with the authorities, ecclesiastical and political.

Joined the Unionist Movement.

When trades unions were permitted by the Russian government as a sign to the growing discontent among the workmen, Father Gapon became deeply interested in the movement and took an active part in the new trade union movement and has done much to unify and build up this force, which now threatens the whole fabric of Russian aristocracy. His powers of organization, joined to an enormous capacity for work, an utter disregard for his own comfort, his fiery eloquence and supreme faith have made him the idol of the trades unionists and enabled him to bring about a condition of organization and the unity of purpose which makes this movement unique in the history of Russia and has brought about by far the most serious crisis which has ever confronted the Romanov dynasty.

A mark of his leadership lies in the fact that he has succeeded in inspiring his lieutenants with his own enthusiasm and singlemindedness of purpose and while he is a priest of the orthodox faith, workmen of all sects—Catholics, Lutherans and Jews, orthodox Greeks and free-thinkers—look up to him with equal faith and devotion. He accepts no money for his work and no sacrifice of time or comfort is too great for him to make. He is an ardent admirer of Tolstoi and was publicly cursed by the pastor of his native village because of his vigorous protests when the great philosopher was excommunicated. His favorite name among his followers is "Little Father of the Little Russians."

SAFELY THROUGH MOTHERHOOD WITHOUT PAIN.

What a wonderful picture of hope and escape from suffering there is in that saying, "She is dressing the heart, that is to say, she is dressing the heart of her Motherhood. Perhaps because it is the first time God has blessed her with a law and mystery and for the coming of her child she is dressing the heart of her Motherhood." The love held out in these words simply means that children bring happiness, that is, that children bring joy, happiness and its agonies and dangers. Because of the blessed gift of life.

MOTHER'S FRIEND

In the name of the remedy which seems to much to help the heart of her Motherhood, it is herself and fed an important, at once which it does when children take pleasure.

The anatomy of Mothers who have used it shows that they are more active than their mothers.

It is the first time God has blessed her.

With love and sympathy and for the coming of her child she is dressing the heart of her Motherhood.

She is dressing the heart of her Motherhood.
